Rainbow of Hope

Narration 1

The morning sun was still low in the sky as Jude looked out over the land. In the early light, the city seemed calm and peaceful. Not so long ago this would have been just another normal day for Jude, but things had changed. The peace of the city had been disturbed. People were no longer happy with their lives. Envy and hatred had fallen on the land like a black cloud. There was a strange stillness as crops failed and buildings were crumbling. Even hope seemed to drain away as people started accusing one another. Kindness had disappeared and the world seemed to be falling apart.

Jude had studied the Great Book and he had finally come to understand the events of recent times. All that was happening had been predicted, yet it was foretold that if anyone could find just one drop of the first rain that fell on the earth, its purity would bring healing to the land and new life to its people. Peace would only return if this special drop of rain could be found. The Great Book also warned of the dangers of such a task, of a figure of ice that would try to stop anyone who attempted such a dangerous mission.
