Rainbow of Hope

Narration 2

Jude understood that his mother and sister would be very sad at his leaving but they also knew his heart. He told them that he was sure of his call to go on this journey. It was stronger than anything else in his life. He loved his family and friends but he also realised that so much depended on him doing what was right, including the future of his land and his city. He said that it was even better to die in trying to find the first drop of rain than to live knowing he had done nothing. The call of leaving was powerful but his mother said that the hearts of all who wanted the land restored were with him. They would pray for him that, in the darkest of times, he would have faith and believe that his quest and the journey were right.
