

Out There

Narration 8

Jade and Napheria got on brilliantly and talked for hours. However, the thought of rescuing people from Earth to live on Alien Nation did not seem a good idea. Napheria promised to help Jade if she could, but did not know how. She saw Jade on to the next part of her journey.

The next stage of Jade's voyage was the longest. So long, that she lost track of time and space. She fell into a deep, deep sleep and woke up in a new galaxy so far away that even the Milky Way looked like a single dim light. In the near distance there was a halo around a planet and, on auto-pilot, the spaceship drew closer and then down through the atmosphere. Incredibly, this planet looked a little like Earth but more like it used to be or as it was meant to be. The seas were a stunning, sparkling blue, the forests a deep, lush green. Rivers and mountains looked absolutely pristine. Jade was stunned with the amazing beauty of this place.

Two angel-like creatures were waiting as Jade's spaceship landed. It was as if they were expecting her. They looked similar to humans but there was a wonderful sense of peace and beauty about them.

One said, "Welcome to Planet Kyrios. It is a real pleasure to have you visit and for us to serve you. You are a most valued guest."

Here she received all the food she needed and, very importantly, the promise that people from earth would be most welcome to come and stay there. After her journey, Jade needed a rest and the peacefulness of this place was just right. In a dream, she recalled the sadness of Earth and the destruction that was happening there. She woke up to a bright new morning thinking Planet Kyrios must be the ideal place but there was also something that made her feel uneasy. Everyone and everything on Kyrios was so perfect, so pure and so immaculate that she felt ashamed in comparison. What if we came here and spoilt it? She wanted to find the perfect place but she felt so imperfect that she did not deserve it. The evil work of Zachary on Earth was terrible but she also knew her own faults. Was the human race really good enough to come here? The contrast between this amazing place and Earth was staggering.

Song – Amazing Place